Learning Styles

The 7 different learning styles that will help you support your child's learning.

Understanding the way your child learns, and adjusting the way you support and teach them, will definitely help your child learn in a more effective way that makes it easier for them to understand. This will in turn help your child engage better with their learning and improve their grades.

#1. Visual

Knowledge or mind maps use visual symbols as a way to express knowledge, concepts, thoughts or ideas, and the relationships between them. These are a great tool for visual or spatial learners as you can draw connections or use colour coding to group ideas.

#2. Musical / Audible

Hearing the information to fully understand it is better than just reading it from a book. Group discussions are a great way for auditory learners to grasp new ideas.

#3. Verbal

Children who find it easier to express themselves by writing or speaking can be regarded as a verbal learner. Techniques used by verbal learners involve mnemonics, scripting, role-playing and anything that involves both speaking and writing.

#4. Physical / Kinaesthetic

Learning happens when the learner carries out a physical activity, rather than listening to a lecture or watching a demonstration. Those who have a preference for kinaesthetic learning are called 'do-ers' and much prefer hands-on learning.

#5. Logical / Mathematical

Children who are logical, easily recognise patterns and can connect seemingly meaningless concepts easily. Logical learners often lean towards classifying and grouping information to help them further understand it.

#6. Social

Children who are best in socialising and communicating with people, both verbally and non-verbally, are social learners. Other children may often come to them to listen and ask for advice. They do because of the apparent sensitivity they have to their feelings, moods and even motivations

#7. Solitary

Children have a solitary style if they are more private, independent and introspective. Their concentration is at its best when they focus on their own thoughts and feelings without the distraction of others.
